Eurohaptics is a major international conference and the primary European meeting for researchers in the field of human haptics and touch enabled computer applications.

This diverse field covers research in areas including human haptic perception, haptic hardware, through to end-applications such as surgical simulation, rehabilitation robotics, communication, and haptic feedback for design and applied arts. Eurohaptics 2016 is part of the activities taking place under the auspices of the Eurohaptics Society.

Eurohaptics 2016, to be held at Imperial College London, U.K., will provide researchers from academia and industry with an opportunity to present ideas and establish contacts with other haptics researchers from around the world. Haptic hardware and software developers will be able to gain information about the latest haptics research, as well as to demonstrate their creations to a wider audience.

We are pleased to announce that the EuroHaptics 2016 Conference in London, U.K., is getting closer, and there are several ways to be involved with support and sponsorship. For 2016 we are expecting around 300 participants (Eurohaptics 2014 had 280 registered participants), and the conference presents an excellent opportunity for interaction with haptics researchers from around the world. In addition to the four primary sponsorship packages below, we can tailor packages to specific requirements.
